I made $239,000 this year selling budgeting and productivity templates online. It's the perfect business to start as a one-person team.

Jason Ruiyi Chin, known online as Easlo, found six-figure success as a student selling Notion templates.Emily Courter

- Jason Ruiyi Chin used Notion for taking lecture notes at school and then began toying with the app.
- He tweeted free Notion-template downloads and grew a big following before he paywalled new content.
- Chin has made $239,000 this year selling templates for budget tracking and organization.

This as-told-to essay is based on a conversation with Jason Ruiyi Chin, a 20-year-old from Singapore who sells Notion templates and goes by Easlo online. Insider verified his revenue with documentation. The following has been edited for length and clarity.

I graduated from high school in 2021. While in school, I often used Notion — a note-taking software platform — to organize my lecture notes.

I realized after graduating that people could customize Notion for different uses and decided to fiddle around with the program's functionality.

I started producing basic templates, like a budget tracker and a habit tracker, under my internet persona, Easlo.

I studied YouTube videos and other Twitter users to create my brand

I learned how to set up various functions in Notion by watching YouTube videos. I released these first templates for free, advertising them to my growing Twitter followers and posting on Product Hunt to get the word out.

While developing my templates, I was growing my Twitter audience. I followed popular productivity Twitter accounts and studied what formats and content they used. I modeled my Twitter behavior after theirs. This research has paid off because I now get significant support on Twitter for my products.

For about two months in summer 2021, I regularly released new, free Notion templates and made them available to anyone who wanted them. They could be downloaded from Gumroad for free, with the option of leaving a tip.

The audience for my free templates was happy to start paying for my new product

I realized that being Easlo might be a lucrative endeavor in fall 2021 when I began receiving tips of up to $100 on Gumroad. In November 2021, I decided to start charging for my new templates and turn "Easlo" into a business. I stumbled into this entrepreneurship opportunity; it was my first job ever.
